To the members of the class of 1997

It has been my honor and privilege to have taught most of you in the past four years. You are one of the most outstanding groups of young people I have taught in over thirty years. Your class officers, the scholars of your class, and the members of your class have earned my respect and admiration. My gift to you is a poem. The authorship is attributed to an unknown Confederate soldier. I first heard this poem many years ago when it was on "60 Minutes" by Max Cleland, who was at the time National Veterans Administrator and recently elected to Congress). Max Cleland lost both legs and an arm while serving his country in the Korean War. When the poem appeared in the newspaper, I cut it out and saved it. Now I pass it on to you. The poem reads:

"I asked God for strength that might achieve
I was made weak that I might learn to humbly obey

I asked for help that I might do greater things
I.was given infirmity that I might do better things

I asked for riches that I might be happy
I was given poverty that I might be wise

I asked for power that I might have the praise of men
I was given weakness that I might feel the need of God

I asked for all things, that I might enjoy life
I was given life that I might enjoy all things

I got nothing I asked for, but everything I had hoped for Almost despite myself, my unspoken prayers were Answered. I am among men, most richly blessed."

With my warmest regards,
William E. Rosser

To the class of 97: As you embark on your paths toward your destiny remember the hollowness of your pathetic lives and always listen to the shallow voice that echo's deep within your mind, and when you're old & feeble and you look back upon your days of youth remember that 1 day amidst all the chaos & violence of society that we will be just another statistic. What does it benefit a man to gain the world yet lose his own soul. The society that abolishes all adventures leaves the abolishment of that society the only adventure.

Jennifer Halloran
